Welcome to this collection of Human Development Reports from the United Nations Development Program (U.N.D.P.)

The Human Development Reports, published annually are independent publications commissioned by the United Nations Development Programme.

The Reports are prepared by the Human Development Report Office team, in consultation with eminent economists and distinguished development professionals.

The Reports contain thought provoking analyses of major issues, updated Human Development Indicators that compare the relative levels of human development of over 175 countries, and agendas to help transform development priorities.
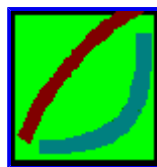

The full text of all the reports and the statistics are available in pdf format. To view these pages you will need Adobe Acrobat Reader

We have calculated the number of "World University Pages" for most of the reports.
These are displayed next to the links to each report.

The calculations assume that you look at the statistics and talk about them in your summaries. However we are assuming that you aren't studying the statistics (or the attached explanatory notes or references) in great depth . If you do study the statistics (or the attached explanatory notes or references) and write extensively about them in your summaries, then you can add the number of physical pages of statistics (or notes) to the amount shown. If you do this you will need to inform the summary marking co-ordinator that you have chosen to do an in-depth summary of the entire report including all the statistics (and/or notes).
